

Topics to Consider Before the Matching Process

Gestational Carrier:

- Most important qualities in choosing prospective intended parents
- Ethnicities and religions you are willing to work with
- Support system during the surrogacy process; feelings of your spouse / partner
- Type of relationship you foresee having with the intended parents during the surrogacy process
- Openness to travel for medical procedures and testing
- Expectations for the intended parents to participate in doctor's appointments, birth process
- Number of cycles you are willing to undergo to achieve a successful pregnancy
- Feelings toward carrying multiples, e.g., twins, triplets
- Willingness to selectively reduce in the case of multiples
- Feelings toward termination in the case of birth defects
- Relationship expectations post-delivery (e.g., pictures, updates)

Intended Parents:

- Most important qualities in choosing a gestational carrier
- Understand motivations for wanting to become a gestational carrier
- Ethnicities and religions you are willing to work with
- Type of relationship you foresee having with the gestational carrier during the surrogacy process
- Location of the gestational carrier and travel requirements
- Desired level of involvement in doctor's appointments, birth process
- Number of cycles you are willing to undergo to achieve a successful pregnancy
- Feelings toward potential multiples, e.g., twins, triplets
- Willingness to selectively reduce in the case of multiples
- Feelings toward termination in the case of birth defects
- Relationship expectations post-delivery (e.g., pictures, updates)

The information provided above is meant as a guideline for your reference only; your surrogacy agreement will outline all details related to the above topics*