

Gestational Carrier Compensation Guide

Not all compensation packages are transparent with your true earnings as a gestational carrier and they are not all created equal. At The Surrogacy Experience, we feel you should be included in the design of your Compensation Package. It is important that you are fully compensated for your time and commitment to this incredible role. The Compensation Package is designed to outline your “surrogate income”, and payments to cover surrogacy expenses. These are typically broken down into three categories: Base Pay, Covered Expenses/Reimbursements, and Benefits.

- Base Pay is the amount you will receive for carrying a pregnancy (a.k.a. surrogate income). This payment is commonly divided into monthly installments beginning when a fetal heartbeat has been detected until the pregnancy ends.
- Covered Expenses/Reimbursements will be outlined in the contract you will have with the intended parents and will detail items such as lost wage reimbursement, childcare costs, etc. It will also include milestone payments such as the embryo transfer or situational events such as a C-section delivery. This is in addition to the base pay.
- Benefits can consist of items such as monthly allowance, maternity clothing, health insurance coverage, term life insurance, travel, legal representation, and so on.

We understand that sometimes it is difficult to know what fees are appropriate and what covered expenses should be included. Below we have listed some of the most common items found in a compensation package and can be used as a guideline to design your requested compensation package. Your specific circumstances/needs as well as the intended parents will determine the final financial terms which are negotiated through legal counsel.
